THE 1970 NUMBERING SYSTEM FOR THE BOSTON SMSA

CENSUS TRACTS WITH BOUNDARY CHANGES

Introduction

Every ten years, the U.S. Bureau of the Census takes a head count of all the people living in the United States, gathering information on their families, their work, their housing, and many other social characteristics.

When reporting this information on small areas, such as the cities and towns around Boston, the Bureau details data by "census tract", a standard unit of land containing between 2,500 and 8,000 people of fairly homogeneous character. If a large area were not divided into tracts, small area statistics could not be made available on it by the Bureau.

In the ten years between censuses, many changes may affect census tracts and make boundary revisions necessary. A tract's population may double in size, requiring a sub-division into two smaller tracts. Or the rivers, railroads, and highways that usually serve as tract boundaries may be eradicated or changed by urban renewal, new construction, or new highways and roads.

The Census Tract Committee of United Community Services is the local group designated by the Bureau of the Census to review all changes in the tracts in the Boston area before each decennial census and to recommend necessary revisions to the Bureau. The U.C.S. Research Director traditionally is the key census tract person for the Boston Standard Metropolitan Statistical Area (SMSA).

Changes in Census Tracts for 1970

The U.C.S. Census Tract Committee has been working since 1966 to review tracts in all of the cities and towns within the Boston SMSA. The Committee's staff has worked closely with mayors and selectmen, city managers, planning boards, engineering departments, public works departments, and town clerks to determine areas of population change, urban renewal, home and highway construction, and needed boundary revisions in old census tracts.

As a result of this intensive review, the U.C.S. Census Tract Committee submitted its recommendations for tract revisions to the U.S. Bureau of the Census. This publication gives a complete listing of all census tract revisions for the Boston SMSA as approved by the Bureau. It supercedes our earlier publication, dated August, 1970. In updating our map series we found that a number of boundary changes had been made by the Bureau that were not reported to us. We are indebted to Mr. John Harrington of the Metropolitan Area Planning Council for calling a number of these changes to our attention.

The bulk of the tract revisions for 1970 refer to the cities and towns that have experienced population growth. In most cases, tracts were subdivided when their populations were in excess of 6,000 to 8,000 people. In some areas where populations had fallen below the 2,000 to 4,000 level, census tracts were combined. Several parts of Boston were retracted for this reason, as in the cases of Charlestown, the North End, South End, and West End.

Tract boundaries were adjusted also when new roads or urban renewal had altered them over the previous ten years. Several of Newton's tract boundaries were affected by the extension of the Massachusetts Turnpike, for example, and in Boston some roads disappeared completely as a result of the Government Center renewal project.

A New Numbering System for Census Tracts

In addition to retracting the Boston SMSA, the Census Tract Committee also has developed a new four digit numbering system for existing and future census tracts that is suitable for computer use.

Professor Frank L. Sweetser, Jr., member of the Committee, designed the state-wide system for Massachusetts.

The previous tract enumeration system was an "alpha-numeric" one that consisted of an alphabetical prefix and a number for each tract. Under this system, for example, the Cambridge census tracts were numbered MC1 to MC30, with the MC indicating Middlesex County. The new 1970 enumeration system, however, is completely numerical, as suggested by the Bureau of the Census, in order to conform with the numbering systems of SMSA's across the country.

The 1960 and 1970 census tract numbers are listed in this publication for each of the census tracts within the Boston SMSA.
